Dear Professor Ferrater Mora,

Thank you for your very gracious letter. We were delighted to meet you. It was a pleasure of which Professor [Smipleton?] was sorry to be deprived at the last moment, but which he promises himself in the very near future. We all greatly look forward to your being with us next year.

I am very glad to have the two lists you sent me. They have already been given to the requisition [...il·legible] and I expect those gaps to be attended to promptly. Thank you for letting us have both lists.

The only matter with which should trouble you at this point concerns your decision on to the order in which you would offer the two courses. As you wish to guide it further thought, or would you prefer to settle it now? There is no immediate [...il·legible] through July and August, we may have early inquiries about new offerings, and I would be glad at that time to have this information.

We were most interested in the candidates you called to our attention. During these spring and summer months, we are eager to make progress toward a decision to be reached in the fall semester.

My best wishes.

As ever,

[Signatura]
