

Sunday – the 15th

Dear Professor Mora,

You were so kind in receiving my brother and I in September, that I am ashamed to be so slow in thanking you. We appreciated your 'intellectual hospitality', and I shall value highly the essay and the book you gave me.

When I got home I read the essay, and reread the book, fully intending to reply immediately. I hoped to mention some of my responses to "The Idea of Man", but starting the new semester has disorganized me a bit. If you would not mind, I would like to write you about it some time. – I realized that if I wrote till 'sometime', this letter would be even more negligent.

I just bought Dante and Morgenbesser's philosophy of Science, but have not read anything from it as yet. I am trying to learn French, and I have two seminars to keep me going.

The American Anthropological Association Meetings will be held in Philadelphia in November (16th to 19th). I plan to attend them, and if you could care to go to any of the sessions, I would be honored to 'show' you around. I shall send you a copy of program when it becomes available, so you can see if and what might interest you.

Again, thank you for a very enjoyable and stimulating afternoon.

Yours sincerely,

[Signatura]
