Dear Mr. Ferrater Mora,

I was delighted to hear from you early this week that Troutman will be invited to come as an assistant in the Department. And now today I have had news from him, too; you told him the secret, too, and he is of course very happy to know it. (Because you told him that he might tell me, he telephoned me the other day when he received your letter; unfortunately, I wasn't in when he called.)

I wonder when the official invitation will come into his hands. Actually, it doesn't much matter. I very much hope that he will be accepting it. He applied to two or three other places, as I told you, and I really hope that at least one of those offers him something, too. But I think it would be best for him to accept Bryn Mawr's offer. And I suspect that that is the way he is going to reason, too.

No, I've told no one, and I shan't until the news is official.

I do expect to be down there soon; probably I shall arrive a day or two after Easter. I'll get in contact with you right away.

Please remember me to your wife; I'll see you both soon.

Sincerely,

J. L. —
