Dear Sir:

A monograph on the Spanish writer Unamuno has recently been submitted to Illinois Studies in Language and Literature. Before deciding whether to accept or reject the monograph the editors would like very much to have your expert judgment of it. Would you be willing to read the manuscript and give us your opinion of its value as a piece of scholarship? We would not expect pages and pages of detailed analysis but, rather, a brief estimate of its merits and faults and an opinion as to whether it is worth publishing?

I regret to say that the University Press pays only $50 for the sort of reading and statement of opinion that I have mentioned.

As I shall be out of town from tomorrow until after the 20th of June, will you kindly address your reply to Professor Philip Kolb, Department of French, Lincoln Hall, University of Illinois, Urbana? If your reply is favorable, the manuscript and a check for $50 from the Press will be sent to you promptly.

Sincerely yours,

Burton A. Milligan
