Bryn Mawr, Penna. 19010

Dear Professor Ferrater:

I want to thank you for inviting me to give the 1902 Philosophy Lecture at Bryn Mawr. I was very much honored by the invitation and, aside from being quite frightened at the idea of coming back to perform at my old school, thoroughly enjoyed my time there.

It was a pleasure really to meet you at last; I appreciated particularly your nasty question which put me in just the right mood for the discussion. Still, if something can be more red, sweet, or, specifically, beautiful than another, then surely something is added when beauty is introduced into a world which previously had no aesthetic value, granted that the increase is qualitative rather than quantitative.

I hope to make a xerox copy of my Chaadayev paper tomorrow. If and when I succeed, I shall send it to Jean Potter and ask ~~her~~ to pass it on to you. It needs some stylistic revisions: please overlook the ~~several~~ clumsy passages.

All good wishes, and thank you again,

Sincerely,

Barbara Zeldin
