Dear Professor Ferrater-Mora:

Following your suggestion I have contacted both Professors García Máñez and Hartman in order to invite them to join the staff of Man and World. Both have accepted our invitation. I have send them a brief reply in which I told them that we shall contact them again in the near future to explain the policy of the journal in greater detail.

In this regard I wanted to ask you the following. Before starting an official subscription campaign we are planning to send a brief newsletter to all co-editors containing the names of all co-editors and explaining the concrete policy of the review in regard to articles, book reviews, chronicles, etc. in greater detail. We are also trying to get the best possible articles for the first issues. Do you prefer to contact all Spanish speaking co-editors with a personal letter in Spanish, or do you prefer me to send them our general letter in English? In the latter case I would need all the addresses of the people you have contacted in the interim (Now I realize that I also need them for our newsletter!). It is evidently possible also for me to send you a number of our newsletters to which you may add a few remarks in Spanish. Please let me know what you prefer.

Continued success in your work,

Sincerely Yours,

Joseph J. Kockelmans
