Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania

Dear Professor Ferrater Mora:

First of all, let me thank you once again, personally and on behalf of the Department of Philosophy and the University, for your visit here and the very stimulating lecture, the repercussions from which I have had to deal with in my classes during the last week - the students were really very interested by it and I think it has had some excellent effects. I feel ashamed, after your own kind letter and your generosity in sending "Man at the Crossroads" and a number of offprints, at having taken so long to write to you; but, as you have probably guessed, have been waiting to do so until I could have some definite news about the publication of your lecture. The authorities were all enthusiastically in favour of our publishing it, the only question being under whose auspices (and with whose financial backing, and by what printer, etc.) A decision has now been arrived at in all these matters, and the work of printing will be put in hand at the beginning of next week; you should have galley proofs in about two weeks. If you prefer, we could read the galleys here for typographical corrections, and send you page proof later for your final approval. I take it that you will not want to make any major changes in content. Your introductory remarks (on page 0) for the occasion of the lecture itself, unless you should indicate a preference to the contrary, will be left out of the printed version.

It was a pleasure to have you with us, and Mary Ann and I both enjoyed the opportunities we had for conversation with you. I have not yet found leisure to read the things you sent me, but look forward to that soon; thank you very much for them, and thank you also for the hospitable offers you made to us when you left, and in your letter. The latter thanks extend of course also to your wife, to whom as well as to you I send warm regards.

Sincerely yours,

Peter Sawz
