Dear Mr. Ferrater,

I am sending this with the idea that you will receive it during this week-end when Jaime is with you, so he also will be informed.

I received a letter a few days ago from Jaime letting me know the reason for his change in plan.

As you may also have heard directly from Hill Tours, they have arranged his passage by air to leave Philadelphia via TWA to New York on Thursday, June 17 at 5p.m. (There is no direct plane flight from Philadelphia to Paris on Thursdays on any airline). In New York (at the same airfield) he changes to a TWA plane for Paris, leaving at 7:30pm. He arrives in Paris next morning at Orly (on flight # 800) around 7:25am, (I am not sure of this exact time). He can check his baggage through to Paris at the Philadelphia airport (TWA will handle this) so he does not have to bother about changing his baggage in New York at Idlewild from one plane to the other.

The actual ticket, with the exact details will be sent to you in a few days. It will include Jaime's return flight Ang. 70 from London to Philadelphia via TWA.

Hill Tours told me that they have no scheduled his flight to give Jaime the advantage of a round trip rate across the Atlantic, giving him the very lowest cost possible. As a result, the cost now of his flight to Paris and return from London comes to $531.50.

In addition to paying Hill Tours this $531.50 for Jaime's air passage both ways I have already paid out on Jaime's account to Hill Tours the following sums:

For Jaime's passenger fare, ferry Calais to Dover,	$5.80
½ deposit at Hotel Strand Palace, London	5.25
½ one night at Hotel Bedford, Brussels	3.83
	$14.93

The total I have expended on Jaime's account is therefore $546.13. (This does not include anything for the cost of taking Jed's car across the Channel on the Calais-Dover ferry, all of which, together with Jed's [non?] fare as a passenger at the ferry, he is paying himself.

Since you have sent me two checks totalling $552.70, I owe you the difference, $6.07, for which I enclose my check.

I will mail you the actual airline tickets in a day or two. Meanwhile, the above should let Jaime know just what his schedule now.

Very sincerely,

[Signatura]
