

June 3, 1975

Dear Joss,

Earlier, after I talked with you on the telephone, I jotted down an impression of what I thought my apprehension of the theory of the collection was amounting to. I intended to send you the note, then somehow held back from doing so. Now, running across the note again, I think it would be well enough to send it on to you. So, if you'll bear with me, I'll copy it out now on the typewriter and enclose it here.

I'll certainly manage to come down to B.M. sometime after the middle of July - or possibly in August. And I hope you may be free for a lunch.

Sincerely,
Joss