Dear Professor Ferrater Mora:

It was extremely polite and friendly of you to bother to write me about my lectures at the College. I too had a touch of "flu" followed by lingering after-effects which would have prevented me from attending the first two lectures had anyone else been giving them. As it was, I felt that I was rather obligated to attend.

I had originally no idea of publishing the lectures; but at the final one, Miss McBride informed me that they could be printed if I choose to turn in the manuscript.

Probably, having written them out for oral delivery, they are so far along toward the printer that I should give them the little extra shove to launch them from the press?

Again my appreciation of your [...il-legible]!

Sincerely yours,
