Dear José,

I was sorry to hear of your illness but trust that you are now recuperating. My deepest thanks for your assistance in the Yale Press matter. If it should fall through, I'll start all over with the local press. Meanwhile, one can only hope for the best.

It occurs to me that I should have mentioned Germaine Brée as a possible reader. She is now acting director of the Humanities Research Institute at Wisconsin, where I spent the year, and is most favorably disposed toward my work. She could be suggested on the same grounds as Renoir.

Thanks again for your assistance and advice. I'll keep you posted of the outcome. Make a speedy recovery!

As ever,

Stanley
