Dear Mr. Mora:

Early this morning, at 6, I began reading your book Man at the Crossroads. To me, it is most interesting and so very well written. The first 25 pages have already determined for me that this is one of a few I want to own.

Perhaps many have found this keen pleasure and almost excitement in following your thought. I know some, perhaps most, of those appreciators will not express their gratefulness to you for this book. It is rather sad that dissatisfaction's voice often reaches a man while satisfaction is only a whisper, too often an ineffectual breeze.

This letter may never reach you or may arrive tardily, but in posting it, I may be representative of many another - selecting your book at random, your name unknown to me - finding an excellent expression of thought.

Thank you then for writing it! Most sincerely,
Evelyn M. Seybold
