Dear Professor Ferrater-Mora,

It was good to converse with you at the meetings of the APA. You confirmed what I have implicitly known, that I must go my own way in the development of my thought...

Your Being and Death arrived Friday and I spent the weekend devouring it. I think it is a master piece. There is no need for slavish praise, however; it will suffice to say that I wish that I had written it. The ending was superb. Perhaps in the end the sincere person realizes that he always lies....

I must say, however, that my reading of it left me with a residue of frustration. This is the sort of work that I would like to do, but very much fear that my talents are exceeded by my aspirations. But I am trying; I have filled reams of paper with fragments which someday I hope I can fuse into a unitary structure. I am even keeping an atrocity called 'Wormwood's Diary'.

With kindest regards and many thanks for so many stimulating hours of reading, 27-3-66.
