Dear Professor Renato Mora,

We are awfully sorry in thanking you for your generosity to us, but hope you know it signifies no lack of appreciation.

The wine greatly improves the aspect of the shelf (where it won't be for long) and we're both delighted with both and offprints.

After reading "Le langage de la poésie", I can imagine that a discussion between you and our dean on science & poetry must have been a lively one. That's his favorite theory and since he obviously places himself on the side of poetry, he

But wishes to your wife. I really am most grateful to her for having helped me so. Wish she could again: my French is in a terrible state.

We feel very fortunate that you visited here - even the Spanish department took an interest, so that makes it an unqualified success.

Cordially yours,
Mary Ann Lewis

must be "ivre de pureté"?
It is a delightful article, though perhaps you object to that adjective - the only other one which occurs to me is involuted and that is scarcely an improvement. I particularly liked the "souire néprisant, même s'il est coufous" part; accepting quite happily the thesis, I am permitted to enjoy the style, aren't I? (Having had to choose that side in this most separated university.) All this sounds both flippant and presumptuous.

Many thanks for your invitation to us - we'd love to take you at your word some time and may.
