Dear José:

One evening at a party I mentioned to Enrique Ruiz-Fornells, a professor of Spanish, that I had been one of your students. Knowing your work well, he was very interested and the idea developed of inviting you to the University for a couple of days during the Spring Semester, 1975. The Philosophy Department and Department of Romance Languages would be joint sponsors. The proposed program is for you to give a public lecture one day on a topic which would be of general interest to both departments and then meet the following day informally with a Spanish class and a Philosophy class. We have no departmental funds for speakers so that a formal application to the Dean will have to be made. The plan at present is to ask for air fare plus a $250 honorarium or something like that.

I am writing now to find out if there is any chance of your coming. You don't have to make any definite commitment now, but if there is a possibility of your coming, we can then go ahead through the official channels. If there is no hitch in obtaining funds, Emmett Parker, chairman of the Department of Romance Languages, will write you a letter of invitation and you can decide at that time.

I do hope you can come. With personal regards and best wishes for the summer months.

Sincerely,

Kathleen Johnson Wu
